Dancefusion Back To Now

Dancefusion, Philadelphia's dynamic modern dance repertory company will present Dancefusion Back To Now, a virtual concert featuring excerpts of works from the past 10 years and three new works for 2020.

Dancefusion will present a video time-capsule of concerts from “Back” 10 years, featuring excerpts of Dancefusion reconstructed works by legendary choreographers including works by Mary Anthony, Anna Sokolow, Jose Limon and Pauline Koner. The virtual retrospective will also include works by contemporary artists including, Colin Connor, Kun-Yang Lin, Tonia Shimin, and Daniel Maloney along with works of company choreographers including, Janet Pilla Marini, Camille Halsey, Jennifer Yackel, Omar Frederic Pratt and Masad Qawishabazz.

The virtual concert will move to “Now” with three new video works. Two works by Jennifer Yackel, Ruby, a haunting solo created, performed, and edited by Jennifer Yackel, set to music of Claude Debussy and a new full company work, Untitled, edited by Douglas E. Draper Jr. and set to Dave Brubeck’s Take 5. Omar Frederick Pratt will complete the virtual program with a new dynamic work featuring the full company.

Dancefusion Back To Now virtual concert is free to the public and will be posted on YouTube. It will be fully accessible and available during the FringeArts Festival and is expected to run up to 35 minutes.

Dancefusion, founded in 1987 by Artistic Director Gwendolyn Bye, is a modern dance repertory company dedicated to both the reconstruction of historic works from America’s rich record of modern dance, and the creation of innovative work. Dancefusion lives and relives the achievements of the past and explores new choreographic directions for the future, expanding public awareness through programs and performances to diverse audiences.
